NILS DURING COVID-19 – QUICK FACTS NILS (No Interest Loan Scheme)

NILS No Interest Loans are a fair and affordable way for people living on limited incomes to borrow to buy an essential household asset or service.

As a response to Covid-19 we’ve repurposed our NILS no interest loans to provide quick financial relief for people who are financially impacted, including people on work visas, and we can also loan over the phone. We can provide loans for urgent financial relief such as bills and debts; flexible payment arrangements, like deferred first payments and longer loan terms; and greater support to revise peoples’ budgets and help them access other Covid-19 financial assistance offered by the government, banks and utilities providers.

Eligibility Criteria – during Covid-19 we are operating as flexibly (yet responsibly) as possible, and exceptions to these criteria will be considered, so please ask. During Covid-19 we have been able to extend our limited income criteria to people on work visas.

On a limited income – those who currently qualify for a Community Services Card or are a single person earning less than the living wage ($42,106 per year before tax). ‘Currently’ means income right now – even if a client’s income was higher before Covid-19, or if they are expecting to return to a higher income;

- Able to afford the loan repayments – affordability can be assessed using deferred loan payments and longer term loans;
- Have exhausted all Work and Income assistance options – ‘exhausted’ may mean attempted but not yet able to access.

The application process

Clients arrange an online or phone-based appointment with a Loan Worker. The Loan Worker works with the client to complete an application – this includes a conversation about the client’s income and financial commitments, to ensure that the client can afford repayments.

Loan Workers will be able to support clients revise their budgets and access the other financial assistance that has been put in place by the government, banks and utilities providers.
